Indigenous Jewellery

Elements By BB

The business manufactures pendants and dilly-bags mainly for the overseas market.

Babette Doherty (nee Fischer) is a Birri Gubba woman from the Wiri Clan. Her artwork is expressed by designing and creating jewellery and ornaments with beautiful rocks through lapidary. The rocks used for her products are formed by volcanic activities over many years that have created these beautiful geographical wonders. These colours, patterns and layers are formed naturally by the process of the leaching of various minerals; include iron oxides, under pressure in rock formations throughout Australia. This process has created these brilliant layers and colours, which Aboriginal people have individually selected and hand crafted into unique pieces of jewellery.

Red Dust Healing is written from an Indigenous perspective for Indigenous Men and their families. The program is targeted at the heart and not the head.

The program facilitates the understanding of “Rejection” and “Grief and Loss” being the foundation of all hurt.

Participants are encouraged to examine their own personal hurt and allow them to heal from within addressing family and personal relationships and what may have been life-long patterns of violence, abuse and neglect. Though written from indigenous perspectives Red Dust Healing also targets non indigenous people. We have run mixed groups. Rejection knows no boundaries it’s the same for young and old, it’s the same for male and female, it’s the same for black and white - IT JUST HURTS.

The program places the participant both in the position of being hurt (victim) and then as the one doing the hurting (perpetrator).

The program identifies the emotions felt as the victim and then the hurt caused as the perpetrator.

Participants are asked to examine the similarities and effects this may have had on their lives while growing up and question whether they are repeating the same tactics that may have hurt them.
